

OMNIS MANAGED PORTFOLIO SERVICE

OMPS Managed Portfolio Service monthly update for Adventurous investors

Chief Investment Officer

Who is this investment for?

The Service is designed for an adventurous investor, who should be:

- An experienced investor who has used a range of different investment products in the past.
- In general terms, they will understand that investment products should be held for a minimum period of five years.
- They will be prepared to accept fluctuation in the value of their investments in order to be able to obtain a higher rate of return in the long run.
- They are similarly not likely to be concerned if the value of their investments were to fall in the short term.

The Service aims to deliver a total return and actively manage short-term risks through increasing or decreasing holdings in asset classes and individual funds. These allocations are determined by the Openwork Wealth Services Limited investment team, which benefits from full transparency of the funds' underlying investments, and is controlled through a strict governance framework.

How we are managing your money

Recent headline economic data have largely disappointed, but signs point to a mid-cycle slowdown rather than the forerunner to a global recession. As long-term investors we note that, while valuations for equities are not as attractive as they once were, shares are still the best choice for the risk component of the portfolio. However, volatility is likely to remain elevated and a selective and measured approach to risk management is essential.

With this in mind, a series of trades was made at the end of May, including the trimming of our exposure to Asia Pacific equities from an overweight position of 19% to a neutral 17%. The Omnis Asia Pacific Equity Fund, managed by Baillie Gifford, has performed strongly, providing us the opportunity to take profits and put the money to work elsewhere. The trade saw us reinvest the profits into US equities, where our underweight was reduced from -5.5% to -3.5% as valuations have fallen closer to their long-term average.

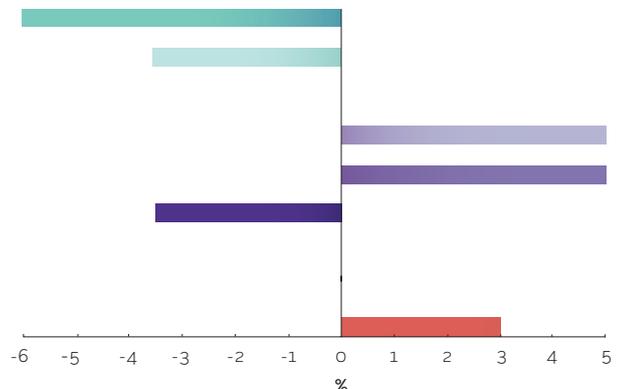

We continue to maintain overweight positions in European and emerging market equities, while keeping a close eye on how these markets may be impacted by any future central bank action or movements in major currencies.

The month in review

They say a week is a long time in politics, well how about a day? Two eurozone mainstays, Italy and Spain, both welcomed in new prime ministers on 1 June. The preceding weeks, our month in review, was characterised by political uncertainty in Europe which, in Italy at least, had long been signposted following March's general election. A hung parliament triggered intense negotiations that came to a head with a coalition finally formed by two populist parties, the Five Star Movement and the anti-immigration League, and the appointment of Giuseppe Conte as prime minister.

In Spain, it was Pedro Sánchez who took office after the swift ousting of conservative Mariano Rajoy, who suffered a vote of no-confidence following a corruption scandal. It will be no easy run for Sánchez with his Socialist PSOE party in possession of only 84 lower house seats, meaning it will be difficult to get his legislation enacted.

Still, these seismic events in Europe remained a side-show to Donald Trump's relations with two Asian neighbours. The will-they-won't-they saga of June's scheduled meeting between Trump and Kim Jong-un took up plenty of column inches, as did his administration's ongoing tit-for-tat trade dispute with China. Talks are ongoing between the world's two largest economies, with both fully aware that a prolonged 'trade war' benefits neither.

From a monetary policy perspective, while a slowdown in UK inflation has halted the Bank of England's impetus to raise interest rates, in the US the Federal Reserve is seemingly on track to hike again in June as the continued shrinking of the country's balance sheet steers it closer to 'normalisation'.
